Glynn Superfund Site Clean-Ups

Brian Farrier

Project Manager

Federal Environmental Protection Agency

As project manager for the Brunswick Wood Preserving Superfund Site, Farrier reported on efforts to clean up the polluted area.

The 84-acre wood treatment facility was operated from 1958 to 1991. The wood was treated using pentachlorophenol (PCP), creosote, chromium, copper and arsenic. Wastewater from the facility was disposed in on-site ponds.

Remedial action began in 2006 and includes placing subsurface slurry walls around the old creosote ponds, treatment of the contaminated soil, treatment of contaminated groundwater outside the slurry walls, restrictions on future use, and monitoring of the project.

Farrier, who works out of EPA offices in Atlanta, holds a degree in petroleum engineering and worked for Tenneco Oil for seven years. He has been with the EPA since 1989.

Following his presentation, a group of Rotarians visited the former wood preserving facility (and now superfund site).

Several Rotarians from other Glynn County clubs attended the April 1 meeting at Epworth By the Sea.

(Wank Davis introduced the speaker.)
