Karen Handel

Georgia Secretary of State

Secretary Handel, whose office oversees elections, said monitors will be deployed throughout the state for next month's elections.

She said there also will be a "rapid response" team to deal with any technical problems that occur.

"Early voting," she said, "has gone extremely well," adding that the goal is to get 25% of the electorate to vote early.

Secretary Handel said there are 300,000 more registered voters this year than there were four years ago for the last presidential election. That increase, she said, is not unusual.

Handel was sworn into office on Jan. 8, 2007, as Georgia's first Republican Secretary of State.

She said she has emphasized "planning and process," and recruiting for talent rather than politics, while instituting and enforcing an ethics policy.

In addition to elections, this constitutional office oversees corporations, securities, and professional licensing boards, and also controls the state archives and the Capitol museum.

Earlier, as the President and CEO of the North Fulton Chamber of Commerce, Handel was directly responsible for working with state, local, national and international organizations to bring job growth to north Fulton County.

She has also served as an executive at several Fortune 500 companies, including global eye care company CIBA Vision and international accounting firm KPMG.

Handel has served in several roles in government. As a Deputy Chief of Staff for the Bush-Quayle White House, she worked directly with Mrs. Quayle to increase national breast cancer awareness.

In 2002, she served as Deputy Chief of Staff to Governor Sonny Perdue, where she oversaw constituent services, the governor's mansion and general administration services. In 2003, she was elected chairman of the Fulton County Board of Commissioners, serving the state's largest and most populous county.

Karen and her husband Steve live in Roswell.

(She was introduced by club member Gary Schwartz.)
